CHILD PROTECTION AND YOUR DAY CARE PROVISION

Information for workers and young people

Children and young people have a fundamental right to be protected from harm.

Families have a right to expect day care provisions to provide a safe and secure environment.

All day care provisions have a legal duty to work with other agencies, for example Social Care and the Police, to safeguard children's welfare.

This leaflet will explain to you what that means in practice. It also tells you where you can get more information or help.

Your day care provision has a senior member of staff who is responsible for child protection matters affecting children at the day care provision (the 'Designated Safeguarding Lead').

It also has procedures which explain how your day care provision deals with child protection concerns, plus other safeguarding policies including how to manage allegations against staff and also a staff code of conduct.

You can ask for copies of these documents from the day care provision office.

DAY CARE PROVISIONS MUST FOLLOW

- The law and Early Years Foundation Stage Guidance
- The South West Child Protection Procedures (www.swcpp.org.uk)
- Their own safeguarding policies

If the day care provision is worried about whether a child is suffering harm, they must refer this on to a social worker.

The day care provision will normally let the child's parent(s) or carer(s) know when they refer but they should not contact parents or carers if they think, or are not sure, that this could put a child or any other person at increased risk of harm. They will usually take advice from social workers about when to speak to parents.

When a day care provision refers a child protection concern to a social worker, they must share all relevant information about the child.

The Data Protection Act allows day care provisions to share personal information with other agencies when there are child protection concerns about a child or young person.

WHAT HAPPENS IF A SOCIAL WORKER IS INVOLVED...

The social work manager, usually in consultation with other agencies, will decide what should happen next.

They may decide that no further action is needed by them but suggest that the day care provision or other agencies do an assessment using the Early Help Assessment Toolkit or provide services to support the child.

They may decide that the referral needs looking into further. What action is taken will depend on the circumstances.

One of the following may be appropriate:

- An initial assessment
- Child protection enquiries. These include assessing the risks to the child, based upon research, information shared and talking to those concerned.

If there is an allegation about harm to a child by a member of day care provision staff or volunteer at the day care provision, a discussion will take place between the day care provision (usually the manager) and the Local Authority Designated Officer (LADO) to decide what should happen next. In some cases this might mean action by social workers and/or the Police. (See also leaflet 'Managing allegations of abuse made against somebody who works with children in Plymouth', ref: PSCB/AMSTRAT/General/Nov18).

If you do not think the day care provision has properly responded to an allegation about harm to a child by a member of staff you can make a formal complaint to the setting or refer to the Gateway Team or the LADO
